Like letting it cover more or less! content Or adding some extra details onto the end of your posts. In this post, I'm going to show you how to do exactly that. Here's what we'll be covering How to include both posts and pages in your feeds. How to add thumbnails to your feeds. How to exclude posts with a certain tag. Set how many posts appear in your feed Without affecting the rest of your site.

<http://energysatrap.com/images/casio-edifice-ecw-m300edb-1aer-manual.pdf>

How to show only posts from a certain category. How to add content to the end of each post e.g. link to your latest featured post. All of this is going to take place in the functions.php file of your theme. If your theme doesn't have one, just create a file in your theme's folder with that name and let's get to it! Make sure all of this code goes between the opening tag in the file Include Pages in WordPress Feed What we will do is add a filter to WordPress when it is searching for posts. The filter is going to check if the posts are for a feed, and if they are, it's going to adjust the query to include both posts and pages. You may want to be more specific and only show top level pages. Again we're going to add a filter to the query and test if the page is for an RSS feed. A lot of feed readers strip out inline CSS, but using the oldfashioned align property should work.
